THEY PLAY TODAY. San Antonio at Hourton. Austin at Galveston. Dallas at Fort Worth. Dentson-Sherman at Paris.

Houston 7, San Antonio S. Tom Turner hit the first home run of the ason and put the sphere over deep right field fence, near the club house, and oldtimers say it is the longest hit ever made on the Houston diamond. For this effort Turner wins a pair of shoes offered by Turner wins a pair of shoes offered by Achenbach & Schuite for the first home run hit, and he will be out today with a new pair of "korrect almpea." The hit was at a time when it was needed. Three men were on bases, and when Tom straightneed out the hall and it dropped outlide the lot, there was a yell of approval that ratifed the windows in the vicinity. For fully five minutes the antience stood as one person and should plaudits of the man who did it all.

The game was not satisfactory by any means, Mike O'Comnor came in for a share of "creating" and lightness lasks was forced.

game was called every member of the San Antonio team rushed toward Jacks, and the crowd surged into the diamond from the bleachers. It required the combined efforts of Chief Heim, Deputy Chief O'Lesry and Officer Proctor to keep them back, as it was feared that some one intended to do the unspire bodily harm. There was a great roar, but it went for naught, Jacks giving the game to Houston as the sore aloud at the close of the seventh in-

Putnam's Challenge.

Harper's Hound Table.

Shortly before the revolution, when the air was heavily charged with forebodings of the approaching struggle, old Major Putham harpened to be in Boston. The major disliked the redcoats, and sometimes inveshed against their arrogant supercilliousness in no gentle terms. One day an officer of his majesty's regulars overheard Putnam assert that the provincial army, untutored in arms as they were would light with the courage of trained soldiers. The officer resented the assertion, and after some hot words challenged the major to a duel, provided he darvel to light. "Dare!" shouled Putnam. "Why, at any moment; but I choose the weapons." "Name them," haughtily registed the of-tiers. Harper's Hound Table.

Name them, naugitily registed the of-tieer.

"Two kegs of gunpowder; the time to-morrow; the distance, ten paces; the fight to be as follows: Yeu to sit on one keg. I on the other, a slow fuse to be attached to each and lighted, and the one who holds out the longest shall be declared the win-ner." There was nothing for the officer to do

There was nothing for the officer to do but accept the unusual weapons, and on the following day, at the appointed time and place, the combatants took their seats upon the keeps of sunpowder. The luses were lighted and beam sputtering, rapidly approaching the kegs. The officer was deathly pale, and watched the growing danger with dilated eyes. At last he could take the longer, and with a leap he left his kegs and raced like a madman out of sight. When he had some tild but laughing kicked the burning fuse away and disclosed to his friend a keg of onlong was subjected to the laughs and gibes of the entire command.
